WILL ORGANIZE SOON.

Debating Society Will Follow Athletics Closely.

"One game of football each week until Thanksgiving," said City Superintendent E. B. Conklin to the East Oregonian today, "and then the season will close and the excess energies of the school boys will be expended on our debating society, in which we hope to develop some winning debaters this winter. Growing and enthusiastic boys have so much energy and enthusiasm to expend, and if that is not directed rightly it is too apt to go wrong, and while schoolboys are playing football on Saturdays, they are not learning bad habits nor forming wrong associations on the streets."

The high school debating society will be organized soon, probably before the football season ends, and some good work is expected this winter. The assembly hall is now occupied as school rooms and it is impossible to use the room for purposes of entertainment. Some arrangements will be made soon, by which assembly hall can be fitted up for the evening meetings.

Among those who will compose the debating team this winter are Glen Scott, Dave Hill, Orville Reeves, Frank Pierce, George Strand, Fred Milne, Edgar Smith, Furnish Slater and others.

These boys have all had excellent training in debating and the high school hopes to carry off some of the argumentative and oratorical honors to be distributed during the school year. No program or schedule of contests is yet arranged.

LANGUAGE IS LOST

ORIGINAL CAYUSE TONGUE SPOKEN NO MORE.

Charles Wilkins, for Nine Years Agent on the Umatilla Reservation, Says But a Few Old Squaws Remember the Original Tongue—Language Now Spoken on the Umatilla Reservation is the Nez Perce—Cayuses Occupied the Country Along the Umatilla River From Time Immemorial.

"The Cayuse Indian language is lost," said Charles Wilkins, who for the past nine years has been agent on the Umatilla Indian reservation, to the East Oregonian. "The language spoken exclusively by all the Indians on the Umatilla reservation is the Nez Perce. But one or two old squaws remember any part of the beautiful Cayuse tongue, which was once the only language spoken by the tribes occupying the present boundaries and location of the Umatilla reservation."

"The Cayuses were once the proudest and most prominent tribe in the West and from time immemorial their home has been on the Umatilla river, from the agency to Bingham Springs. Their language was one of the great independent Indian tongues, separate and distinct from any other Indian language. Most of the other Western tribes had a language transmitted from some eastern or southern tribe, and had no pure tribal tongue, as had the Cayuses. The Cayuse language was one of the original Indian tongues, equal in age and purity to that of the Iroquois, in the East, or the Cherokee in the South."

"The Walla Wallas and Umatillas lived on the Columbia river near Walla Walla and the mouth of the Umatilla river and had not a pure tribal tongue, but spoke a mongrel language, made up from all the tribes with which they had come in contact. "Finally after the union of the tribes and their confinement on the reservation, and their intermarriage and association with the Nez Perces, that language became the universal language among them. The Nez Perces are nearly all cousins to the Umatillas of today. They are very friendly and are widely intermarried."

"There are perhaps but two or three very old squaws who now remember a few words of the original Cayuse tongue, and they never use that language, but converse altogether in the Nez Perce."

In speaking of Joseph, the Nez Perce chief who recently died, Mr. Wilkins said: "Joseph was a trouble maker, wherever he was located. He was opposed to schools and wanted the Indians to go back to their original savage customs. His sole ambition in trying to secure the Walla Walla valley was to establish a home for himself and followers on the original Indian plan, where they would be free from the restrictions of the whites."

Mr. Wilkins owns a most beautiful elk tooth, presented to him by Joseph several years ago, when the old chief made a visit to the Umatilla agency and was entertained by Mr. Wilkins.
